“The Highlanders” as the tribal communities that live in the interior region of Odisha (formerly “Orissa”,) India call themselves, live in abject poverty that would be hard to imagine. Many children die at birth or at a very young age – due to lack of decent health care or nutrition. Those who survive have little chance of improving their lives – access to nutritious meals, education and healthcare is limited or non-existent. They live in an area that has no roads, electricity or clean water supply. Even getting there is a daunting task.

It is in this place that Shared Blessings in partnership with Integrated Development Society, a local organization, is working to improve the conditions of the villagers.
